2. Most scientists leave East Germany because there is no job security. Many students are connected with the Security Police and must receive passing grades or else they will submit a derogatory and false report on the professor to the Security Police.  there is absolutely no academic freedom. Up until 1950 scientists in East Germany fared well but since 1950 the fear of being moved to another location completely ruined morale. In 1950 the East German government recognized the need of continuing research in the universities which could not be supported elsewhere.
